

Previous media consolidation has worked against the public interest in many ways. The monolithic editorialization of news is increasingly evident. Any further media consolidation is clearly contrary to the most basic principles of free idea exchange in a free society.